THE PROBLEMS OF GROWTH

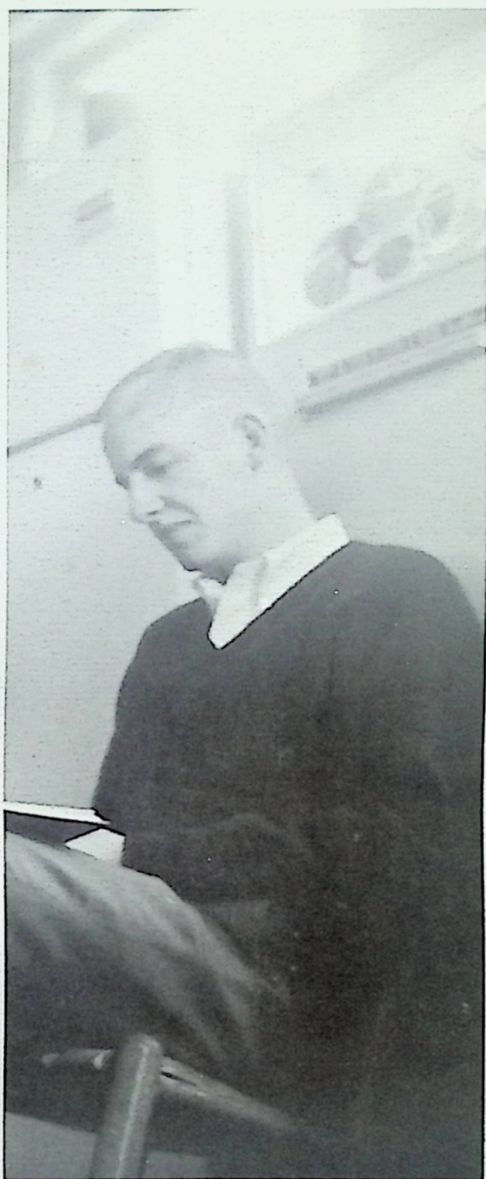

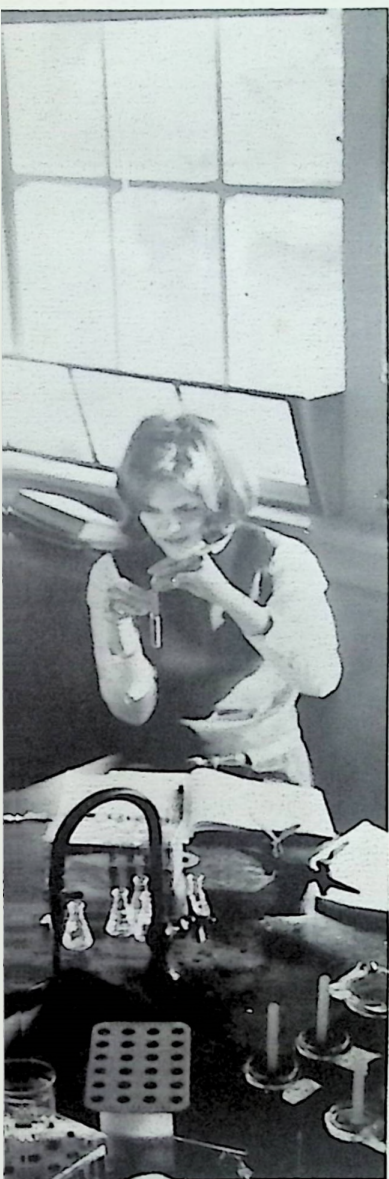

In this Yearbook the students of Patrick Henry College have attempted to record the problems and the pleasures of receiving the first two years of their education in a growing institution.

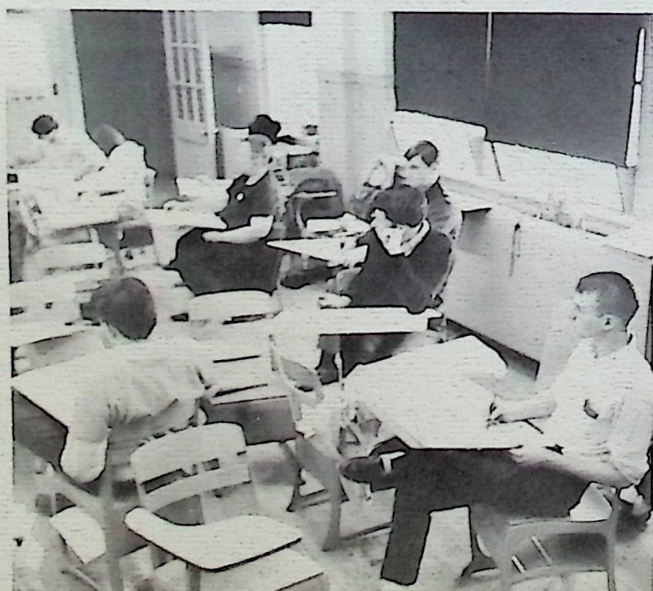

It is to their credit that they have been able to understand and accept limited facilities and over-crowded conditions with good sense and humor. They are to be commended for concerning themselves with the primary task of learning and working together.

PROSPECTIVE CAMPUS

At the time of the formation of Patrick Henry College, it was decided that the school should eventually evolve into a full campus college serving the surrounding community. As a result, in 1964, the legislature of Virginia granted the money to purchase the land for the new campus, and the preliminary plans were drawn. From these, the final plan was selected. In 1966, money was granted for the purchase of an additional thirty acres of land.

Construction is scheduled to begin during the fall of 1967, and it is hoped that the school will be ready for occupancy by the 1968-1969 term. An administration building, containing classrooms and a library, and a science building, which will include laboratories, classrooms and a 320-seat lecture room will be built during the first stage of construction. Additional buildings will follow in later years.

BIOLOGY

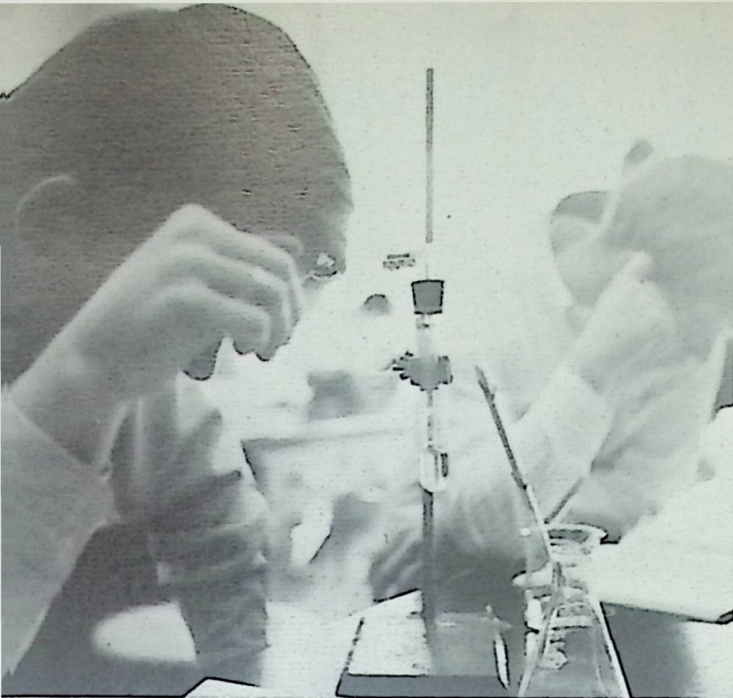

JAMES W. McINTOSH, M.S.
Assistant Professor of Biology

Patrick Henry College, believing that all college students should have a background in at least one laboratory science, offers biology to all first year students. Under Mr. James McIntosh the student is introduced both in classroom lectures and by actual experimentation in the laboratory to varied topics. The purpose of the Biology Department of Patrick Henry College is to give the student a broader understanding in the physical, biological world as a preparation for understanding life in general.

The Biology Department must also meet the needs of an expanding student body and an expanding interest in her sister sciences. Therefore, in the near future it plans to offer courses in anatomy and physiology.

SHERMAN S. DUTTON, Ed.D.
Associate Professor of Chemistry

CHEMISTRY

Stretching, as it does, from one extreme to another, chemistry is one of the broadest of sciences. With an ever increasing demand from business and government there has been a shortage of trained chemists. To encourage an interest in this highly provocative science and to give a scientific background to the liberal arts and business students Patrick Henry College offers chemistry to all interested students. Under Dr. Sherman S. Dutton, the student is introduced to a completely new world. The course consists of both classroom and laboratory instruction, which enables the student to apply the principles he has studied in class. Through inductive reasoning he is able to make decisions and to draw conclusions from what he observes.

The Chemistry Department plans to expand to meet expanding student needs, for chemistry, as is biology, is a required subject for an expanding number of degree programs, such as medicine, pharmacy, and engineering.

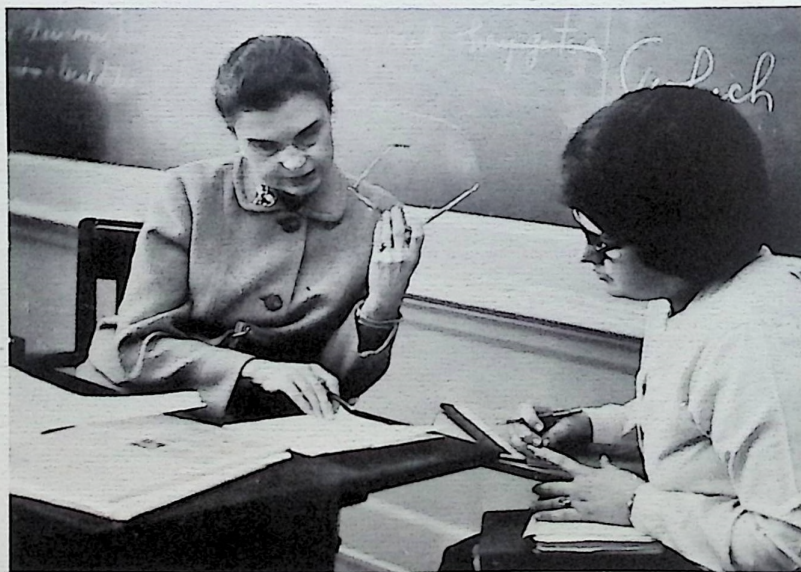

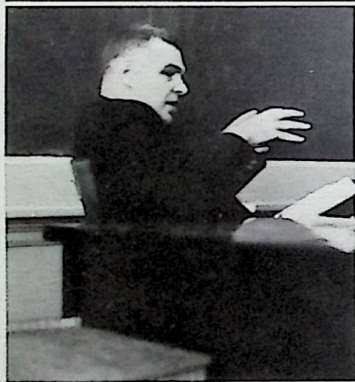

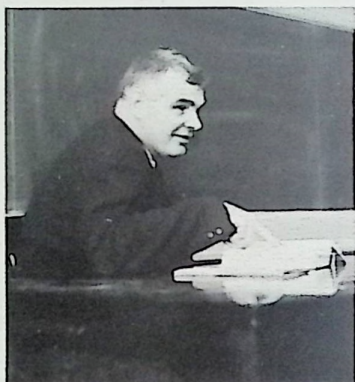

ENGLISH

MRS. DOROTHY Z. MILLS, M.A.
Instructor In English

Since all students need a thorough background in English, one of the major objectives of the English Department is to see that each student be thoroughly skilled in expository writing. This ability will allow him to express himself in the modern world. Also, the department feels that a student should have a background in literature, for a truly educated man must have a knowledge of the literary achievements of the past and the present. Under the direction of Mr. Nat V. Daniel and Mrs. Dorothy Z. Mills, these objectives are being carried out.

NAT V. DANIEL, JR., M.A.
Assistant Professor of English

BOYD F. McGEE, M. Ed.
Assistant Professor of Mathematics

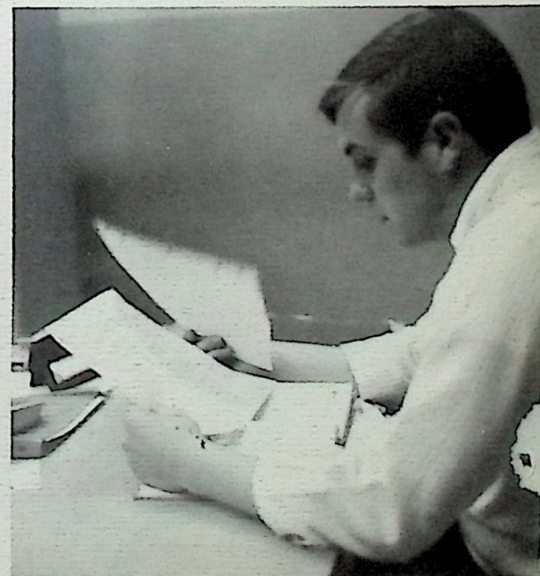

MATHEMATICS

Mathematics is an ever expanding field that offers great prospects for the future. The Math Department of Patrick Henry College recognizes this fact by offering a variety of subjects from which its students may choose. At present it offers refresher courses in algebra, geometry, and trigonometry as a preparation for more advanced work and advanced courses in calculus and probability.

Under Mr. Boyd McGee and Mr. Charles Revie the students are introduced to various concepts that should be of valuable assistance in their future.

CHARLES R. REVIE, M.A.T.
Instructor of Mathematics

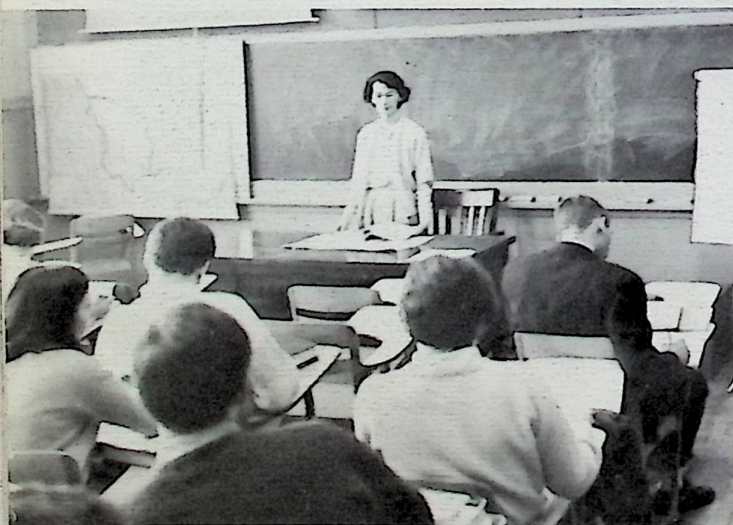

DAVID T. MORGAN, M.A.
Assistant Professor of History

HISTORY

One of the most interesting and stimulating parts of the curriculum at Patrick Henry College is history. All students are required to take at least six hours, with a variety of courses to choose from. These include United States history, Western Civilization, and Russian history. Additional courses are offered as there is a demand for them. Each course is designed to offer the student a broad background in the subject he has selected.

The History Department feels that in order for a student to develop into a well-rounded person he must have a clear knowledge of the past. Under the capable guidance of Dr. Mary P. Adams and Mr. David T. Morgan, the student is given a comprehensive study of History. This preparation should help prepare him for his role in our complex society by giving him an understanding of how that society developed.

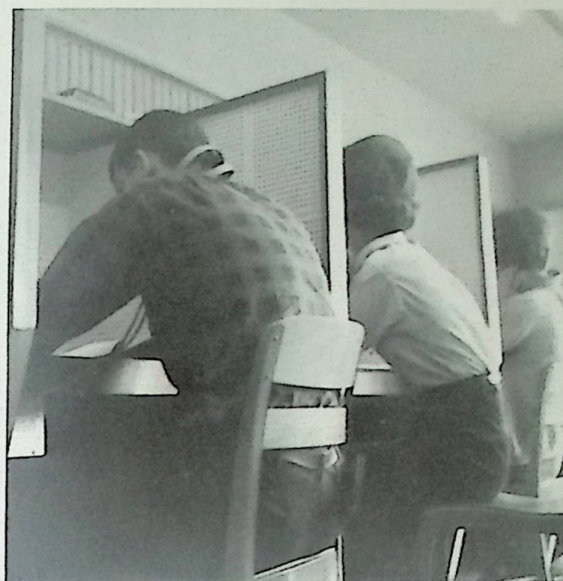

MISS MARY P. ADAMS, Ph.D.
Associate Professor of History

MRS. RUBY D. MITCHELL, Ph.D.
Assistant Professor of Spanish

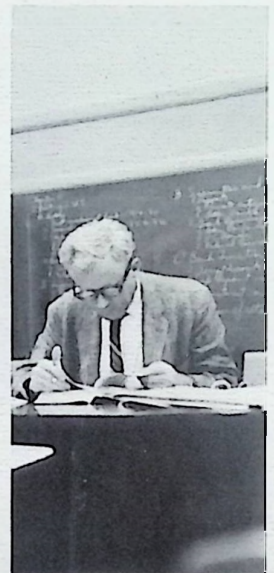

FOREIGN LANGUAGES

As the world grows smaller and smaller because of modern scientific and technological advancements, the necessity of knowing a foreign language has become more and more prevalent. All students at Patrick Henry College are given the opportunity of taking either French or Spanish. In both of these languages courses are offered through the third year of study. The purpose of these courses is to give each student a knowledge not only of the language but also of the culture of the countries. In addition to the regular classroom lecture periods, the student must spend at least one hour in the language laboratory and two hours in drill sessions each week.

MISS JOYCE A. SCOTT, M.A.
Instructor in French

EVENING COURSES

During the afternoon and at night, Patrick Henry College offers nineteen courses which are taken by over two hundred full and part-time students. These include a variety of credit and non-credit courses, ranging from accounting to sociology. Furthermore, several of these, such as education and guidance counseling, can be applied toward graduate degrees.

EXPANDING LIBRARY MEETS CHALLENGE

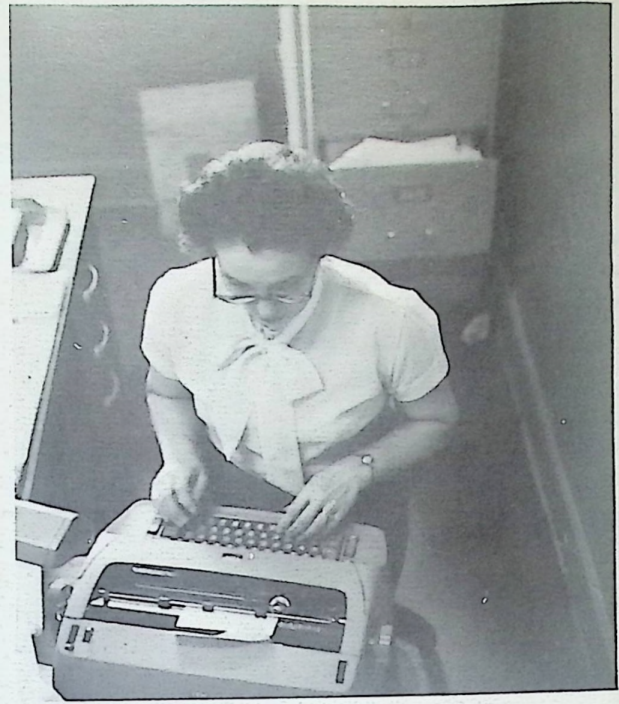

The Library of Patrick Henry College is rapidly expanding to meet the needs of the student body. With the introduction of a larger number of courses and, hence, with the demands of an increased student body, the library is in the process of making changes which should provide better facilities for the entire student body. Under the guidance of the librarian, Miss Ruth E. Hutchinson, the library has been converting from the Dewey decimal system to the more efficient Library of Congress system. Likewise, the library has various supplementary services for the students use such as the availability of micro-film. With these and other improvements the library of Patrick Henry College should be a great asset to the student body.

MISS RUTH E. HUTCHERSON,
(M.A.) Ed. (Lib. Sc.)
Librarian and Lecturer in Library Science.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

THE HONOR COMMITTEE

Patrick Henry College's Honor Committee is composed of eight members appointed by the faculty. Its task is to investigate any students who are accused of violating the Honor Code. The Honor Committee holds its meetings in secret, and if a person is accused of an honor breach, he is summoned before the committee to defend himself. If he is found guilty of lying, cheating, or stealing, he is dismissed from the college. The Honor Committee is the highest authority in such cases, and these cases are not reopened unless some new or pertinent information is presented on the individual's behalf.

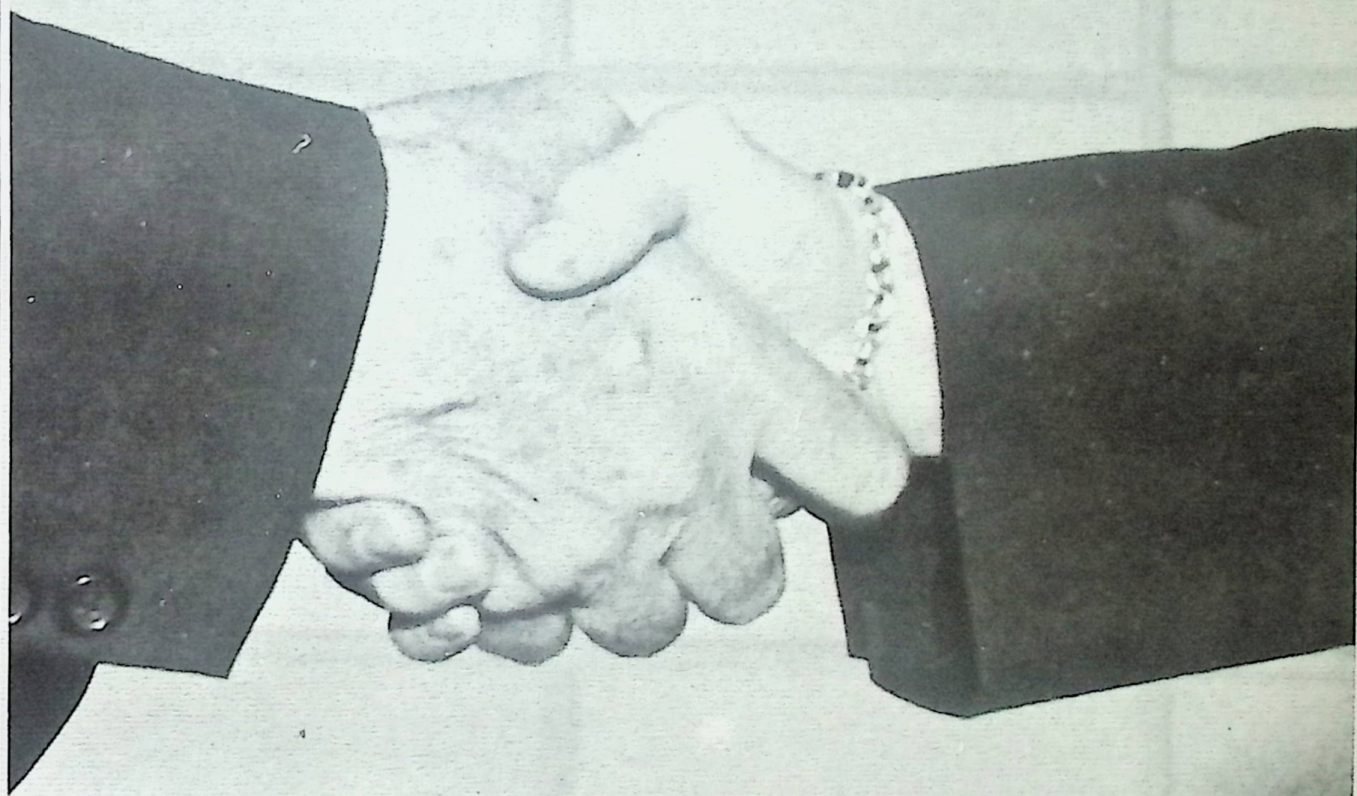

Each student agrees to abide by the college's Honor Code when he enters the college and it is his duty to uphold the system. Only by doing this can the students maintain the high standard of honesty that its parent institution, The University of Virginia, has maintained since before the Civil War.

EPILOGUE

We of the annual staff have strived to make the 1967 Orator the best year book that Patrick Henry College has ever produced. We have tried to make it a book that will be cherished by both the students and the faculty both now and in the future. It is our utmost desire that we have accomplished this task and we hope that the faculty and student body will get as much pleasure and enjoyment from it as we have had in putting it together.
